Subtitle: Race and Racism
NOTE: This course will consider the concept of race from a broad anthropological perspective. Topics examined will include the biological differences between people globally; the way these have been used to define and naturalize the categories we call "race"; and how those categories have been used to create and maintain sociopolitical hierarchies in the past and present. If people constructed these categories, can they deconstruct them, or have they taken on a life of their own?

In this iteration of the course, we will focus on modes and forms—specifically how to blend them. Students will research, formulate and execute at least eight poems blending three modes and forms each. In this course, we will read some classic modal and formal poems, four monograph books that utilize mode and form, as well as, Lewis Turco's famous craft text: The Book of Forms. We will pay special attention to craft theory. Students will produce at least eight polished poems and several brief craft and academic papers. We will use texts with a wide variety of poetry (Chelsea Dingman's Through a Small Ghost,	4	LEC	TR	11:00AM	-12:15PM	HS 243	NIEVES

		NOTE: Exploring answers to these key questions lie at the heart of this introductory-level course, which aims to acquaint students with the study of world history by probing the ways science and technology have profoundly shaped human civilization while also being products of it. Furthermore, it will examine the historical relationship between human practices and the physical world, thereby offering an opportunity to reflect on the connection between human beings and their natural environments. As an introductory seminar, this course will also provide instruction in the skills necessary for college success along with opportunities for these skills to be practiced and evaluated.

		Subtitle: Medieval Christian,Muslim,Jews
		NOTE: The purpose of this course is to study the interactions between cultures and religions in the medieval Mediterranean from the seventh century of the Common Era to about 1500 CE. The course will focus on the shifting relations between Christians, Muslims, and Jews through the investigation of four spheres of contact. These include the MIDDLE EAST AND BYZANTIUM, the IBERIAN PENINSULA, EGYPT AND NORTH AFRICA, and the OTTOMAN AND VENETIAN competing landscape of the early modern period. Because relations between the three Abrahamic religions remain one of the most vexed issues in today's world, special attention will be paid to the ramifications of the study of the past for our understanding of the present.

NOTE: History 430, The Late Roman Empire, explores the society of the Mediterranean world from the fourth through mid-sixth centuries CE-the time of Constantine through Justinian. We will engage with a number of aspects of ancient Roman culture such as identity, immigration, social justice, gender roles, citizenship, and religious pluralism. By studying these issues in their ancient context, students will not only gain an appreciation for our human past, but also a better understanding of how these issues are critically relevant today.

Subtitle:		Drinking in America: A History
NOTE: This course explores the social and cultural history of alcohol in the United States from the late 18th century to today. The so-called "liquor question" has historically been linked to gender, class, ethnicity as well as economics, public policy, and civil liberties. We consider the relationship between changing drinking habits and various forms of control, most importantly temperance and prohibition. Why did the working-class saloon become such an American institution and why did it die out. Why did national prohibition succeed? Studying the cultural politics of drinking provides a window into modern American society and helps us understand today's attitudes and policies around alcohol."

NOTE: Historians and the broader public have sought to understand the Civil War, as well as its causes and effects, for generations. Despite the vast constellation of people and ideas associated with the war, a comparatively narrow group of topics has been the primary focus of historical inquiry. More recently, a number of historians have turned their attention to less-studied issues and groups and thus presented a fuller picture of the conflict, its foundations, and the enormous changes it engendered. This course closely examines a wide range of topics related to the Civil War and Native American conflict, death and medicine, constitutional history, foreign policy, capitalism, slave refugee camps, and women's experiences on the homefront and battlefield. United by the common theme of war, the course readings offer additional insight into the strengths and

NOTE: In modern South Asia, British colonialism dramatically wrought changes to culture, society and identity, in addition to its effects on the economy and politics. In this seminar we will explore and evaluate the ways in which "religion" - a category overlapping with many aspects of South Asian cultural and social life - became an important medium in the imposition of European authority. We will understand how colonialism shaped the concept of "religion" in the experience of empire, and in turn, how this category of knowledge helped British rule manage and order society on the ground in the subcontinent. The seminar will examine the influence and limitations of European knowledge and power on the course of various local traditions --Islam, Hinduism,

NOTE: At present, the university is planning for a blend of face-to-face and online learning experiences. Because the situation is still fluid, changes are possible at any time. Major status updates are posted on the SU website: https://www.salisbury.edu/news/coronavirus.aspx . Depending on circumstances, there is still a possibility that everything may revert to completely online again in fall. In regard to SCED 473 (Methods II), although we have a small class, we also have some unique challenges. Because some of us (myself included) live with family members in at-risk categories, I am planning to continue with remote Zoom sessions as the fall semester begins. At this point, it is not clear if circumstances will allow us to get back to our physical classroom for SCED 473 during the fall 2020 semester. We may need to continue via Zoom for the entire
